The Speaker educated the students on Menstrual Hygiene.

Proper management of menstrual hygiene is crucial for women's health. This includes using sanitary pads, tampons, menstrual cups, or other menstrual products.

Changing sanitary products regularly (typically every 4-6 hours) to prevent bacterial growth and infections.

Proper disposal of used menstrual products to maintain cleanliness and prevent environmental pollution.

Plastic pads, commonly used as menstrual hygiene products, can have several potential side effects, primarily due to the materials they are made of and how they interact with the body. Some of these side effects include:

Skin Irritation: The plastic or synthetic materials used in pads can cause skin irritation, itching, or rashes, especially in individuals with sensitive skin. This can occur due to friction or prolonged contact with the skin.

Allergic Reactions: Some people may be allergic to certain components of plastic pads, such as fragrances or chemicals used in the manufacturing process. Allergic reactions can manifest as redness, swelling, or itching in the genital area.

Breathability Issues: Plastic pads may not allow for adequate airflow to the genital area, leading to moisture buildup and increased humidity. This environment can promote the growth of bacteria and fungi, potentially leading to infections like yeast infections or bacterial vaginosis.

Discomfort and Chafing: The plastic materials in pads can sometimes cause discomfort or chafing, especially during physical activities or prolonged wear. This can result in discomfort or pain in the genital area.

Environmental Impact: Plastic pads contribute to environmental pollution due to their non-biodegradable nature. Improper disposal of used pads can lead to environmental contamination and harm to wildlife.

Odor Issues: Plastic pads may trap odor-causing bacteria, leading to unpleasant smells during menstruation. This can be exacerbated by poor airflow and moisture buildup in the genital area.

To mitigate these side effects, individuals may consider using alternative menstrual products such as organic cotton pads, menstrual cups, or reusable cloth pads, which are often made from natural and breathable materials and are less likely to cause irritation or allergic reactions. Additionally, practicing good hygiene, changing pads regularly, and opting for unscented products can help minimize discomfort and reduce the risk of infections. If experiencing persistent irritation or discomfort, it's essential to consult a healthcare provider for proper evaluation and guidance.

They introduced the FOHOWAY brand pads to everyone. This is made up of pure cotton, Bamboo, Aloe Vera gel and the plastic which is used in this bio degradable.
